THE ART OF SOCIAL DISTANCING

Mental health in Covidland is essential. Even if the Covid numbers are fake news, the emotional damage is not. People have fallen into problematic behaviors such as drinking, smoking, overeating, hyper-focusing on the news, poor sleeping patterns, helplessness, hopelessness, lack of motivation to tend to personal hygiene or care, or to return calls and messages from family and friends. If you are having trouble with any of these, you are more normal than you think. Covidland is home to the world's greatest emotional rollercoasters.

Social distancing, being alone, is more challenging for some than others. As we enter the "December to Remember," if you are feeling lonely, or if you know someone who is feeling lonely, PICK UP THE PHONE!!! The reason why the Shamash is the highest of all the candles, even though it is not even a holy candle, is because it lights up the rest of the candles. It could be that you are not that important, that G-dly. But if you figure out a way to light up the night for other lonely people, you are both important and G-dly.

A close friend was very sick and alone in the hospital. He did not want anyone asking him how he is doing anymore, as he fell deeper and deeper into depression. The hospital was not allowing people to visit because of Covid regulations, so I asked for a virtual call. I knew that if I could make him smile in the few minutes he would give me, I would deserve my Olam Haba medal. The second he saw me, I smiled at the camera and said, "I miss you!! (Pause) It is harder to reach you than it is to reach President Trump! (Pause. Cracked a smile.) He said, "Yosef! I miss you too!" (Pause) I told him that a Rabbi is going around the hospital visiting the sick. He was asked by one of the elderly patients to sit at his bedside. The Rabbi noticed that there was a plate of peanuts on the table next to the older man. During his visit, the Rabbi started noshing from the nuts. The nuts tasted pretty good, and the Rabbi, slowly but surely, finished the plate. Before leaving, he apologized for finishing the peanuts. The man said not to worry. He could not eat the peanuts anyway. He had no teeth. Those were chocolate-covered peanuts that his granddaughter sent him to suck off the chocolate! (Endless laughter) I said, "You don't have to be hesitant to answer my virtual calls. I won't eat your peanuts." (Endless laughter) I witnessed, with my own eyes, how laughter is truly the best medicine. My friend edged out of depression from that point on, and before I could say "Corona," he was released from the hospital. I felt like a shamash; I felt on top of the world, the World to Come, of course. I would not sell the merit of that virtual call for all the money in the world.

The year 2020 will be recorded in history as one massive, extended, global disruption: A global pandemic, prolonged economic uncertainty, political confusion, distrust of the news, riots, and protests. But most of all, 2020 will be remembered as a time that forced people to spend time alone and disrupted the way people think.

Being alone, a person gets a lot of time to think. Your mind can be your greatest friend, but for some, it can also be the greatest enemy. In 11 studies, people chose to do mundane activities or even administer electric shocks to themselves instead of being left alone in a room for 6 to 15 minutes with their thoughts and do nothing but think. People rather do something than nothing, even if that something is negative or harmful. We are so busy constantly running, maybe, because psychologically, we don't want to stop and think. The smartphone is probably the most powerful tool ever created to prevent a person from having time alone or time with family. And so are the other addictions mentioned above.

What are we supposed to think about, anyway, when we have so much time alone? Divorced, baal teshuvahs, people who are struggling to find a spouse, the elderly - the list of the lonely goes on. How can a person make time spent alone a beautiful time? One successful, normal, extremely lonely person told me that he hears the walls screaming silence when he is home alone! How can one cope with that?

After Yaakov crossed over Maavar Yabok, he came back for some lost jugs. וַיִּנְתֵּר יַעֲקֹב לְבָדּוֹ and Yaakov remained alone. The Midrash here says something hard for me even to write. Although G-d is incomparable, some Tzaddikim can be likened to Him in certain ways and perform, on a small scale, the miracles that He will perform at the End of days. Eliyahu Hanavi revived the dead and stopped the rain; Elisha the prophet revived the dead, helped a barren woman get pregnant, etc. Yaakov is compared to G-d in the sense that he was alone, just like G-d will be alone at the End of Days, as all evil will dissipate. וַיִּנְשָׁב יַעֲקֹב לְבָדּוֹ בַּיּוֹם הַהוּא. And YKVK will remain alone on that day.

What is the meaning of this comparison between Yaakov's being alone and G-d's being alone? And why does the Midrash single out Eliyahu and Elisha as the Tzaddikim likened to G-d on a small scale? It seems that there is greatness in being alone, and great things happen when great people are alone. When a person is alone, he can connect to his Neshama, connect to G-d. A lonely woman told me she could not stand being alone at home with her husband anymore. She could not stand the sound of his breathing. "But who is deciding that he should breathe? G-d! אתה נפחת בי ואתה משמרה בקרבי. You blew (my Neshama) into me, and You are guarding my soul and breath in me. Every time you hear him breathing, You are observing G-d with you, in the room, breathing your husband!"

When Yaakov overcame the Angel and was alone again at sunrise, the passuk says, וַיִּנְרָחֶלְקוּ הַשֶּׁמֶשׁ and the sun rose for him. The commentators ask, what does that mean, the sun rose for Yaakov? The sun rises for everyone! The answer is that only through being alone can you realize that when G-d brings up the sun, He brings it up for you! When you are alone, you realize on a deeper level that G-d is so close, so personal, so real, and so easy to relate to!

Of course, the point here is not about turning into an isolated monk. It is about being comfortable with the time you choose or have to be alone. People who have healthy and successful marriages and relationships know that you need to split your time into three. Time together, time with others, and time alone. Avraham, Yaakov, the 12 tribes, Moshe, Shaul, and David all chose to be shepherds because shepherding gives you a lot of time to be with yourself, with your Neshama, with G-d. And there is nothing more empowering than that. This is why the Midrash mentioned earlier singles out Eliyahu and Elisha. They were masters of meditation and Hitbodedut. From them we learn how important it is to be alone, with G-d. (See Rabenu Bachye Bereshit 46:32)

When Yaakov was alone on Har Hamoriah, he said, אֲכֹל יֵשׁ יְקִיָּק בְּמָקוֹם הַזֶּה וְאֲנִי לֹא יוֹדְעֵתִי. R' Shimshon from Astripoli (1600-1648) explains this with a Kabbalistic twist. Four חיות הקודש, Angels called Hayot, carry the Holy Throne of G-d. The shapes of the faces of these four Angels are אריה Lion, Cherub, Eagle or vulture, Face of Man. (Yehezkel 10;14) The Talmud tells us that the face of Man is Yaakov's face. (Hulin 91b) Until Yaakov's dream, Yaakov only knew of the three other faces, אריה, כרוב, נשר. That is why he said, אכן I know that G-d is here and that the faces of the angels are of a Lion, Cherub, and Eagle, the acronym of them all being אכן. But I never knew that my face appears upon the Holy Throne, ואנכי לא ידעתי, לא ידעתי, א'ר'יה, נ'שר, כ'רוב, י'עקב, לא ידעתי, Yaakov had the most empowering experience.

When you have time alone, you get to know yourself. As you discover your purpose and what you are truly passionate about, you recharge as your purpose becomes greater than your fears. You become empowered to do what you need to do in life without the need for validation or approval. You begin to understand where you should invest your time, money, effort. You find out what you are good at and what you are not good at. It builds your confidence and empowers you to make a bigger impact on your world.

Selfie steps for time spent being alone:

1. Count your blessings. Ask yourself what you have to be grateful about, in the greatest detail. Include gratitude of past, present, or future. Ask how your blessings obligate you and to whom they obligate you.
2. Challenge yourself to uncover where your beliefs and thinking have been inaccurate, regarding past, present, and future. Examples: Inaccurate Fears. Frustrations. Failures.
3. What negative experiences did you inaccurately perceive as Permanent, Personal, Pervasive.
3. What are just some of the endless choices and options that G-d gives you to make a better future for yourself, your family, your world?
4. What is in your control, and what is not; how can you accept what is not in your control? What are some of the infinite options for G-d to make things better?
5. Do NOT think negative thoughts when you are alone 1. Blaming others. 2. Guilt. 3. How stuck you are.
4. What you want and can't have. Just as you would distance yourself from negative friends, it is equally important to distance yourself from your negative inner voice.

THE ART OF RESILIENCE

People that can keep their calm have what psychologists call resilience, or an ability to cope with problems and setbacks. A loss of a job, a breakup of a relationship, health issues, difficulties raising children... We can't prevent such things from happening, but we can improve the way we react to them. When facing adversity, there are only two options: grow or suffer. You can fall into depression, or come out much stronger. It is all a question of attitude. Successful people, with their positive attitude, choose to grow. They choose to bounce back, find calm in crisis and chaos, and reinvent hope, options and solutions. Resilience is a trait clearly found in our Patriarchs, Avraham and Yaakov.

After Rachel died and was buried in Beth Lechem, the passuk tells us, וַיֵּסַע יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּנֵט אֶת־לֵיהּ מְהֵלָאָה לְמִגְדַל־עֵדֶר (Bereshit 35, 21) And Yisrael traveled, and he pitched his tent passed Migdal Eder. Yaakov did not sulk in sorrow after losing his dearest wife Rachel, the woman he gave up so much for. He did not consider his mourning a long or a last "stop", but continued traveling on in life.

The Alshich asks, what is the importance in mentioning that after Rachel's death, Yaakov moved his tent passed Migdal Eder? And what is special about Migdal Eder that the Torah finds it important to mention the place by name, especially if Yaakov did not pitch his tent there, but just passed there?

The Mei Shiloach learns from this that when faced by adversity, Yaakov took it as an opportunity to grow. "Migdal" is a tower fortress; Yaakov grew on a personal level by making an emotional fortress of acceptance and faith. The Torah praised Yaakov for this superhuman feat of having overcome his emotions by according him here the angelic title of "Yisrael", and not Yaakov.

Yaakov emerged strong from the depths of his sorrow: Rachel was only 36 when she passed away! For seven years, Yaakov had worked for her deceitful father in order to marry her - from the time she was fourteen until their marriage, when she was twenty-one. Rachel was barren for seven years. Then, tragically, when Yosef was only eight years old, Rachel died in childbirth, with Binyamin.

What makes people great is not how they deal with success, but how they deal with difficulties. Yaakov's life did not get better after losing Rachel. Before Yaakov got back home, his mother Rivka died. Rivka was buried at night, with no one from the family there to be at her burial. Yitzchak was blind, Yaakov was forced to leave home at the age 63, and 40 years later, he had not yet returned home. Rivka's passing is not mentioned in the Torah for her burial was done in secrecy. They buried Rivka at night to prevent Esav from knowing about it and attending the funeral, so that people would not curse the wicked man's mother. How sad! Yaakov did not even have a chance to see his mother before she died. He was still on his way back home. And then, within a short time after Rivka died, Leah died, at the age 45. All this did not break Yaakov. Instead, it made Yaakov more resilient.

How does one become more resilient? How do people go through hard times? Viktor Frankl wrote, in his book Man's Search for Meaning, "Man can be taken away from everything except one: the last of the human liberties, the choice of the personal attitude he must adopt towards his destiny in order to develop his own path." No one can take your choice of attitude away from you. Choice of attitude was the only thing Holocaust survivors had to hold onto to go through the Holocaust.

Choosing a positive attitude when everything else is taken away is no easy task. Yaakov needed to travel passed Migdal Eder, he needed to meditate on accepting G-d's Will with love, and to pass this hard time by becoming a fortress against frustration, and towering above it all. This is the power of Migdal Eder. And in the merit of Yaakov's faith while in this place, something amazing will happen there. Migdal Eder, which is near Beth Lechem and Efrat, will be the place where Mashiah will reveal himself!!! (See Targum Yonatan) Because salvation always comes from the place of resilience.

The path to greatness is paved with resilience. Resilience made Yaakov great, winning him the title Yisrael. And only resilience is what won Avraham the title of Chief, נְשִׂיא אֱלֹקִים אִתּוֹ בְּתוֹכָנוּ (Breshit 23;6). The last of the ten tests of Avraham Avinu was that he bought a grave at a high price for his wife Sarah from Efron. (Ramban; Rabenu Yonah) What exactly was this test? And how can this test even be classified a test, after Avraham had proven himself by a much greater test, the Akedat Yitzhak?

The passuk says, וַיִּקָּם אַבְרָהָם מֵעַל פְּנֵי מֵתוֹ וַיְדַבֵּר אֶל בְּנָיָו: Avraham got up from upon his dead, and talked to the sons of Chet, saying. What is the purpose in the Passuk telling us that Avraham "got up" from his dead wife Sarah? What else? Did he speak to the Bney Chet while he was still on the floor, crying?

R Yerucham from Mir answered that the purpose of this passuk is to stress that Avraham did not get stuck on this sad time, but got up. He wiped his tears away, and he spoke to them as he would speak if nothing had happened. This moment, was one of the most emotionally intense moments in Avraham's life. He just aced the test of Akedat Yitzhak, and now, he faced the sudden, tragic death of his Eshet Chayil! And to top all this, Avraham needs to purchase land to bury his wife, land that was promised him by G-d to begin with! But after Avraham eulogizes Sarah with the Eshet Chayil and weeps over her death, he gets up and goes on. וַיִּקָּם אַבְרָהָם.

Avraham's tenth test was not to see if he would buy a grave or not. The test was not to see if Avraham could purchase a Land that was promised to him by G-d, without questioning G-d's promise. Avraham was being tested on his choice of attitude, to see if he could stay positive despite the loss he had suffered. Avraham's final test, the only test after Akeidat Yitzhak, was the test of resilience. Read the pesukim of how Avraham talked to the people of Chet. You will be surprised to notice how he addresses them in a very respectful, thoughtful and calm manner! Avraham does not say, Look at what I am going through; have pity on me! This land is promised to me, so stop being so difficult about it!

Why was this test of Avraham's resilience such an important test? How can this be a test after Avraham had passed the unthinkable challenge of Akedat Yitzhak? Because the way you deal with life under duress, the way you deal with people when you are under stress, is the biggest test of who you really are! Our Rabbis teach that there are three things that reveal who a person really is. אדם ניכר בכיסו the real person is revealed when one gets a trial concerning money. אדם ניכר בכעסו, the real person is revealed by the type of response he gives when being slighted. And אדם ניכר בכוסו, a person is revealed through his "cup", when he is going through a hard time, through mourning כוס של תנחומים. The Man you really are, is revealed via three Mediums. When you are Mad, when you are in Mourning, and when you are going through Monetary stress. (Eruvin 65b) This last test of Avraham, was the test that would reveal who he really was, by testing his resilience. After all, a man is not judged by his successes, but by how many times he falls and gets up again.

One of the greatest skills you can learn in life is how to survive and deal with the changes in life that you did not ask for. We have Patriarchs to learn from the importance of being in total control of our emotions. We can learn from them the art of overcoming feelings of regret, denial and hopelessness. And we can learn from them the importance in preventing negative emotions from stopping us from moving ahead.

Here are the Torah based Selfie- Steps. The self-help steps to master the art of resilience.

1. Accepting and embracing your new reality is the only way to adapt to it. Everything is orchestrated by G-d, and everything is only for our good. Try to find purpose in it all.
2. Thoroughly explore all the options available. G-d opens other doors before He closes the ones you are used to.
3. Pray with passion. Set reasonable goals and take actions to solve the problem.
4. Eat well. Sleep well. Exercise. Pay attention to your needs, and nurture your Nefesh. Turn to others for help, support and to share your feelings.
5. Believe in yourself that G-d put inside you some G-dliness, and that you can somehow deal with and overcome the impossible. "Whether you think you can go on, or you think you can't – you're right."

UNENTITLEMENT

An interesting question occurred to R Yitzhak Zilberstien. A certain philanthropist made a speech about how he made his money. "All my advisors told me not to lose a certain amount of money because of Shabbat, but I lost the money anyway. In that merit, I am rich today."

Was this appropriate? Or maybe, a person is not supposed to attribute any success to his/her merit. After all, the passuk tells us אֶל־תִּאְמָר בְּלִבְךָ בְּהַדָּף יִקְנֶה אֱלֹהִים אֶתְּמוֹ מִלִּפְנֵיָהּ לֵאמֹר בְּצַדִּיקְתִּי הִבִּיאֵנִי יִקְנֶה לְנַפְשִׁי יִקְנֶה אֶל־עַד אֶתְּמוֹ מִלִּפְנֵיָהּ: Do not say in your heart (to yourself), when G-d, your G-d, has driven them (the seven Nations of Canaan) away from before you, saying, in my merit Hashem brought me to inherit the Land...(Devarim 9;4). From these words, Rabbenu Yonah in his Shaarei Teshuva derives the golden rule – (Shaar 3; 9) A person should not accredit any successes to his/her own merit. But rather, everything that we have is a kindness from G-d... So, was the speech appropriate, or not?

R Zilberstein points out that there is a difference between the between the philanthropists citing his merit and the possuk telling us not to attribute success to our merit. It could be that the problem lies in “saying to yourself”. But in public, to inspire other people spiritually, to motivate ... that is a different story. (Chashukei Chemed Ketubot 68a)

One of our most difficult challenges is to be truly humble. Humility means that you are not entitled to anything; it is all a kindness from G-d. And what you don't have is also a gift from G-d. So, this week, I was the guinea pig for trying to undo all my feelings of entitlement. I tried to think about all the resentments I have been holding on to. I tried undoing the underlying mistake, and in that way, getting rid of all the negative repercussions resulting from it. The plan was to mentally unentitle myself from honor, respect, dignity, rights, smiles, expectations of a returned favor... And I must say, it was very rough to accept that all I have is kindness from G-d, and that I do not deserve anything from Him. And to simply let go of all that I thought I was entitled to.

I am smaller than (unworthy of) all the acts of kindnesses (things I don't deserve) and from all of the truth (things that I deserve) that You have done for Your servant, because I passed over this Jordan river with my Staff alone, and now I am two camps... (Breshit 32;11) What do those words mean? According to Rashi, the passuk means, “I received so much from G-d, so much blessing, that I have become small”. For when one realized how G-d saves him/her from danger, or when someone realizes how he/she is blessed by G-d, this makes one feel how truly undeserving he is.

But there is a Hassidic twist to these words. As the Sfat Emet teaches in the name of the Chozeh of Lublin, even humility is something to be humble about, for it, too, is a kindness from G-d. And of all the kindnesses of G-d, the greatest is to stop feeling entitled. As the passuk says, . קטנתי מכל הטובים

At the outset, I was not successful because the feeling of being entitled for so many years builds up a lot of muscle. I just got stuck on things from my past. It takes time to undo that feeling and free ourselves from resentment/entitlement. If I'd be able to uproot only one thing from my having been brought up in America, it is the feeling of entitlement that infiltrated into my mind/heart/psyche from Western culture. And if there is one thing that I want to preserve from my American upbringing, it is that other people are entitled to respect, dignity, space, and their spot on line...

So, what is the solution? How do we undo entitlement, before it undoes us? Judaism, of course, has the ancient and eternal solution. An emotional/psychological exercise, three times a day. You see, not only do we learn to pray three times a day from our Patriarchs, we also learn how to pray from our Patriarchs. According to Rabbenu Bachye, it is appropriate, befitting, and correct that a person meditate, while praying, on his total dependency on G-d, and how G-d is the Master to whom he is a servant. This is learnt from Yaakov's prayer, קטנתי מכל הטובים: Only after Ya'akov's confession of his utter dependence upon G-d, does he ask Him to be saved from his brother Esav. ONLY AFTER THIS MEDITATION CAN WE OFFER A REQUEST! So many people complain that G-d has not answered their prayers. But real prayer is changing yourself, undoing all of your supposed entitlement. (Sefer HaKrim 4;18)

The Rabbenu Bachye continues. Even in times of plenty, to meditate on the times we realized how we were totally dependent on G-d, as Yaakov said, that he remembers clearly how he started off at the age of 77, with nothing more than his walking staff. Everything was taken by his nephew and student, Elifaz, son of Esav, in order to spare his life. (Nedarim 64 ; Rashi 29;11) As one of the wealthy first generation Syrian American Jews told me, “They used to call me Banana Boat (a derogatory term for Syrian immigrants and foreigners- Banana is a term for an Asian person living in a Western country, e.g., an Asian American ). Now they call me Luxury Liner! But I will never forget that I was once a Banana Boat!”

In the world of American psychology, undoing entitlement is to say that I am not more entitled than the other. Here are some signs of entitlement psychologists look for... 1. You expect the same rules that apply to others shouldn't apply to you. For example, other people might need to start at the bottom and work their way up, but you shouldn't have to. 2. You feel massively put upon when other people ask you for small favors, but expect that when you ask people for favors, it requires no big effort, on their part. 3. You expect other people to be more interested in you and what's on your agenda than you're interested in them and what's on their agenda. You see your own interests as more interesting than other people's, and see your goals/dreams as more valid or important than theirs. 4. You disregard rules that are intended for everyone's comfort. For example, you ignore signs to “please not put your feet on the chairs in public places”. 5. You use programs to download music rather than pay for it. Or, you benefit from free services, shiurim, content, etc., on public platforms all the time, but never donate during donation drives. 6. You inconvenience others, without thinking. For example, you cancel appointments or reservations repeatedly. Or, you make plans with friends and then cancel without considering that your friend may have organized other plans specially to accommodate you. Or, you run into a store 1 minute before closing, without thinking about the fact you'll be delaying the shop assistant from getting home on time. You think “it's only 5 minutes”, without considering that the assistant may have somewhere they need to be. 7. You think it's OK to upset or offend other people. 8. You cheat in environments that are based on reciprocity. For example, you use all the gemachs you can, but you don't spend the same amount of time trying to give back...9. When working in groups, you think you should be the leader or get the most credit. And you don't recognize the contributions of others or the balance of the team. (adapted from Psychology Today – Dr. Alice Boyes)

But the real solution, the only solution is to think out of your box. Not only we are not more entitled than others, but we are not entitled at all! To recognize that whatever we have, even our ability to pray, is a gift, gratis, from Hashem. As we remind ourselves before each prayer, אֲדַבֵּר שְׁפֹתַי תְּפִלָּה, My Master! Open my lips, and my mouth will say Your prayers! Without You G-d, I can't even open my lips to praise You!

Of course, it is much easier to say this with our mouths than to say this with our hearts. But we can't afford entitlement beliefs. Entitlement is from the worst traits one can be suffering from. The antonym of entitlement is gratitude – people who feel entitled do not feel grateful. And people who are not grateful are miserable people. And people who are miserable people become bad people.

If only we could meditate in our hearts on what we say with our lips, our social problems would be solved. We would be happier and better people. And all of our prayers would be answered.

WORK SMARTER / PRAY HARDER

How does a person know if he is doing the right amount of Hishtadlut, or if he is overdoing it? This is the million dollar question, and one of the most common dilemmas of every-day life. It has ramifications in all areas of performance. In dating, in business, in academic achievement – in almost anything in life that is stress related. How many shadchanim to call? How many hours to work?

How long to study for the test, or prepare the lesson for the class? Mastering this balance is one of the keys to happiness (see Orchot Tzaddikim Simcha, שביעיה). And is something that may be worthwhile praying for. This is the underlying message of the serenity prayer, “Grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, courage to change the things I can and wisdom to know the difference.”

Yaakov was faced with fear. His brother, Esav, was after him. What does Yaakov do? Three things. He splits up klal Yisrael, his family, into two. He prays that he not get hurt, that he not hurt others. And he sends presents to Esav. Yaakov was afraid that he might be vulnerable because it could be that he had sinned. And that is why he did not want to rely on a miracle. But, don't we know that if Hashem wants something to happen, it will happen anyway? Why was Yaakov even trying, even doing hishtadlut? Also, we know that Yosef was punished with two additional years of jail for doing hishtadlut, when he asked the Sar Hamashkim to remember him. What is the difference between the two scenarios?

The answer is that “G-d does His Thing” through a person's hishtadlut (שער הביטחון פ”ג התנאי השביעית). Whenever a person is faced with confronting an Esav, or worldly matters which Esav represents, he needs to do some type of hishtadlut, to bring about Hashem's Will. For most people of the religious world today, it is not as hard to have emunah and bitachon as it is to balance Hishtadlut with Emunah. Even though we learn from Yaakov's splitting the family that a person should do what needs to be done to make things work, we see that Yaakov was punished for bowing down to Esav and for calling him “Adoni”, my master. So, was it right or wrong that Yaakov tried to do his best?

The answer is that there is a golden rule at the base of hishtadlut. The rule is the the knowledge that whatever G-d wants is going to happen, when and how He wants it to happen. G-d does not need this specific hishtadlut from our part to do what He wants to do. Any hishtadlut can do the job. Hishtadlut brings G-d's blessings, without our having to rely on an open miracle. As R' Ben Tzion Abba Shaul, a”h teaches that it is like buying the ticket to get on the train. The train is going from point A to point B, not moving from its track, even one centimeter. You just need the ticket to get onto that train. But, you are not doing anything more than buying the ticket. The only hishtadlut that can change a decree is prayer and spiritual service. And even prayer does not change the Will of G-d. Prayer just changes the person; he becomes more humble, more accepting. And when he becomes a different person, he deserves different decrees (Sefer HaIkrim 4;18).

This underlying rule of hishtadlut has three conditions. The three conditions of proper hishtadlut are based in question format. 1. Am I reacting to a problem or taking control of it? Am I acting out of fear, doubt, insecurity, lack of patience; if so, it is a sign that my emunah is off, or am I able to respond in a way that is most productive? 2. Are my efforts crossing over the boundaries of the spiritual commitments and standard that I believe I could reach? 3. Am I praying as hard as I am trying?

The first rule is based on the Chazon Ish's answer to what Yosef did wrong. Yosef's asking the Sar Hamashkim was not proper hishtadlut. Why was he asking this low-grade person to remember him? The chance that this type of hishtadlut would work is nil! Yosef's belief in G-d was not off, but his hishtadlut was not appropriate. It was rooted in despair; such hishtadlut is not emunah-based hishtadlut. Another point here, made by R' B. D. Povarski, is that Yosef asked for the favor 3 days before the Sar Hamashkim was taken out of jail. At that point, Yosef did not have to ask for help from this Sar Hamashkim, it could have been that Yosef would be freed from prison before the three days were up. This shows that Yosef's response was one of despair, not of emunah and proper hishtadlut (Adapted from the Mashgiach, zt”l, Rav Dov Yaffeh, לעבודך באמת).

This is a great lesson. Proper hishtadlut is only when someone acts with intent, not as a reaction to emotions or external situations. Proper hishtadlut has to be planned ahead, thought out, its degree, timing and manner carefully considered. What makes the most sense? How much do I have to do in order for it not to be an open miracle that G-d helps me? This is such an important rule in all areas of life. To think ahead, before letting hishtadlut take over your headspace, your schedule, and your spirituality.

I recently saw a piece of sound business advice from Dale Carnegie, one that can knock down 50% of your worries at work and in so many other areas of hishtadlut. It can quadruple your productivity. It is a solution to having mindfulness, instead of losing it. You see, usually, the question that people ask themselves in business management or any other management is, What do I do next? This question is ineffective. The best hishtadlut to approach a business problem, or any problem in life is with the four questions. 1. What, exactly, is the problem? 2. What is the core of the problem, why does it exist and why is it still here? 3. What are all the possible solutions to the problem? 4.

What is the best solution? ... and then choosing that solution as your hishtadlut.

The second rule is based on the fact that Yaakov was punished for bowing down to Esav seven times, and from calling him my master eight times. This was improper, because if hishtadlut in anyway crosses tracks with emunah or bitachon, it is inappropriate. I remember what R Yehuda Ades, Shlita, said in a class to some working people from the Syrian community in New York. He said that if you set up time for prayer, time for Torah, and you are giving up from your service of G-d for the sake of your hishtadlut, you are overstepping the boundaries of proper hishtadlut, as if G-d can't bring your salvation while doing His Will.

And the third lesson is, that if you are not putting your hishtadlut in prayer, but in physical work alone, that means that your hishtadlut is not emunah-based. These three laws of Hishtadlut are so applicable, so measurable, so real. They are all life changers.

I DON'T CARE ANYMORE

I coached someone who once had a lot of money. We had a heart to heart discussion about those years when EVERYONE was his best friend. He would take guys out to restaurants, on trips, and pay for all of his "friends'" expenses. He told me, "Yosef, none of the guys knew this, but I could not sleep at nights. I used to lie in bed for endless hours, wondering who really cares for me and who cares about my money. More than once, I concluded that no one cared for me. I wanted to commit suicide." I was shocked! Lack of being cared for can cause suicidal thoughts?

I finally got around to reading a great book, The Charge, by Brendon Burchard, and this is what he writes. "Babies who are not cared for die. Suicide notes ring with the haunting assumptions that no one cared and no one will care. People without a caring environment demonstrate erratic behavior, lack positive emotional range, get divorced, cheat, and abruptly quit jobs. The number-one reason people quit jobs across all industries is lack of appreciation- no one demonstrated that they cared about or were grateful for the person's hard work and contributions. Caring is serious business."

People have asked me what sparked me to want to become a coach. Well, it happened one day when a long lost friend came over to me and said he wanted to thank me for something. He said that our first winter semester in Yeshiva together, due to his serious case of acne, no one was interested in talking to him. I met him one time, as we crossed the street together, and I asked how he was doing. He said, "Ah, okay, I guess." I asked him, "Are your acne creams working? Are you seeing results?"

He said, "Not really." And then, he said I told him something that saved his life. "People don't care what type of a person you are on the outside as much as they care about what type of person you are on the inside". "From that day on," he said, "I started opening up to the guys, and I saw that people actually did care about me. I never told anyone, but I was planning suicide. You saved my life. I owe you one."

There was never a generation like ours, where people don't show genuine care for others, just for the sake of genuinely caring, or carrying on a conversation just for the sake of giving the other person a feeling of being cared for. We do chessed, but unfortunately, too much of our chessed is political chessed. What do I mean by political chessed? What are politics? That's when people do or say things with an ulterior motive, not because they really believe in what they are saying or doing. Political Chessed is Chessed with an ulterior motive.

When we ponder over the ulterior motives of ourselves and those around us, we will see a different world than the world we see. Have men become rabbis because they care to pass on the word of G-d, or because that is a job they found themselves in? "כי שפתי כהן ישמרו דעת ותורה יבקשו ה' מפיהו כי מלאך ה' צבאות הוא, אם דומה הרב למלאך ה' יבקשו תורה מפיו ואם לאו אל יבקש תורה מפיו". (Moed Kattan 17a) If you want to know who to choose as a Rabbi, make sure that he is a messenger totally dedicated to G-d, that he has no ulterior motives, and that his only wish is to pass on G-d's word. Just like an angel, whose only agenda is G-d's agenda. In chinuch, are our mentors there for the sake of chinuch, or is there prime concern keeping a job, to control others, or a need for honor and respect? Do we, as parents, care about the modesty of our daughters with their best interest in mind, or because we are afraid about the family image? Do we stay frum because we have become comfortable doing so, or because we love and fear G-d and want to serve Him? This political caring is Esav's way.

When Yaakov was coming home, after 34 years of missing out on the mitzvah of Kibud Av Va-em, he planned how to deal with Esav. Esav now lived in the Land of Seir, in the Field of Edom. Yaakov knew that Esav still harbored hatred in his heart, because the names that Esav gave the places where he lived, showed that he had not forgotten the episode of the Berachot. Se-ir means hair. Esav was known as איש שעיר, a person with a hairy body, and Yaakov's mother Rivka, placed goat skins on his arms and neck to trick his father into thinking that he was the hairy son Esav. He called his field Edom, Red, to remember forever the red lentils that Yaakov used to buy the rights of the firstborn son from him.

R Yonasan Eibeshits comments that we know that Esav's behavior was the epitome of Kibud Av Va-em. When he would serve his father, he would don royal clothing. He would say, "It does not accord honor to my father, if I serve him with any other clothes." (BR 65, 16) If so, why did Esav leave his father, in his father's old age, when his father was blind, and move to Edom, Seir? Why was Esav in Edom, not home taking care of his father Yitzchak? He answers that it was because Esav saw that Yaakov left Eretz Yisrael and married two sisters, Even though marrying two sisters is forbidden by the Torah; but outside of Eretz Yisrael, before the Torah was given, the forefathers did not keep certain parts of the Torah. So Esav decided to leave Eretz Yisrael, so he could sin as much as his heart desired, without looking bad in his father's eyes.

R Shlomo Levenstien, answers in a different way. Esav only respected his father for the sake of getting the Berachot from him. Esav was so good at this political Kibud Av Va-em that he reached the highest level of Kibud Av Va-em while putting on his show! Once the Berachot had been given to Yaakov, Esav left his father.

But this is not the Jewish way. Yaakov was the exact opposite: he was the epitome of the trait of Tiferet, congruent, consistent in his behavior, always honoring his parents. תתן אמת ליעקב. Even after Yaakov had four wives, twelve Tribes and considerable wealth, and he needed nothing more from his father, he came home to perform the mitzvah of Kibud Av Va-em. Until today, we do not eat the Gid Hanasheh, the sciatic nerve, to remind the Jewish People for all generations, that our ancestors, the Twelve Tribes, did not join their father Yaakov when he went back to get the small jugs, which resulted in Yaakov fighting the angel alone, and having the Gid Hanasheh knocked out of place. (See Chizkuni) To always remember that the Tribes did not care for their father enough, when he needed them.

The Jewish way is to care for our parents, our spouses, our children, the people in our lives, even when we don't feel that we "need" them. To show them we care for them, even when it costs us money, time and effort.

THE HAPPIEST MAN I KNOW

There is an old Swedish saying, "Those who wish to sing always find a song." Happiness is like wanting to sing. Once you wish to be happy, you will find something to be happy about. Happiness is more an active decision than a state of being. You do not need to wait for times to get better to bring you happiness. You need to make happiness happen. The way to find it is through ideas taught to us in the Torah; some of them are mentioned below. After reading the coming concepts, you can apply them and remain happy, no matter in what difficult circumstances you may find yourself. It all boils down to adopting the four core elements that comprise the basis for happiness and the fundamentals that stem from them. The four core elements are mentioned in the Orchof Tzaddikim. Faith in G-d, Trust in G-d, Histapkut(-contentment), and Intelligence. Bear with me.

Picture for a moment the happiest person you know. The person you got to know who somehow stays happy, even when the going gets tough. Can you think of such a person? (Just picturing a truly happy person in your mind for five min. can bring you to happiness. Try it.) Go back in your memory to when you remember how that person was going through a rough time and did not complain. Not even a kvetch. They just passed it by, staying calm and collected, keeping their head low, waiting patiently for the high tide to pass.

How did they do it? Simple. Go into their belief system and find out. See how they perceive the world, and pick up their perspective. Tune in on their outlook, and you will produce the same results as they do. If you cannot figure out the elements of their belief system, fear not. The four elements of the Orchof Tzaddikim is their belief system.

One way for you to find out another person's basic elements of perspective is by listening closely to their choice of words. After the dream of the ladder where Yaakov was blessed by G-d with tremendous blessings, Yaakov vowed that he would tithe his wealth to build a House for G-d and bring a sacrifice on Har Hamoriah. His words were, "If G-d watches over me, and gives me bread to eat and clothes to wear...." Why did Yaakov ask for bread to eat and clothing to wear? What else would one do with bread and clothing? In these words, Yaakov revealed to us what the secret of happiness is. He did not want clothing for any purpose other than to have something to wear. Yaakov was not looking for fancy clothing that makes a person appear successful or important. He was not concerned with making impressions on people. All he wanted from food was nutrition. He was not interested in the taste, nor did he regard eating as a pastime. This is one of the core pillars of contentment. Knowing very clearly how to get along with a minimum and make the maximum from what you do have. It means a deep understanding of the essence, purpose and function of each worldly item you need or want. The difference between needs and wants was very clear to Yaakov. Yaakov went back over the river for some small jugs, as Rashi explains. (33;25) He valued all his possessions, even if they were inexpensive, because he bought them from his hard earned money. (Chullin 91) He valued his money not because it gave him a sense of power or a bigger balance in the bank. In Yaakov's eyes, physical objects are simply a means by which one can serve G-d. When we are healthy and well clothed, we can serve G-d in a better manner. That's what he wanted from clothes and food. Without cups or small jugs, you might have to drink from your hands, something which is certainly looked down upon. Ya'akov was able to see the true value of everything he had. He went back over the river just to bring these physical items, things that he needed for כבוד האדם, basic self respect.

Listen closely to Yaakov's choice of words in his conversation with his brother, Esav, and note the contrast between his and his brother's style of speech. When Yaakov tried to convince his brother to take the present he was offering, at first, Esav refused, saying יש לי רב אחי, I have a lot, my brother. Yaakov, on the other hand, pleaded with his brother to accept his gift, using the words, יש לי כל I have everything. Why the switch?

Yaakov had contentment in life. Therefore, he had everything he wanted. Happiness is feeling that you have what you want. When you do not feel that you are missing some coveted desire. What was it that Yaakov had more than Esav? Did Esav have less physical possessions than Yaakov, such that he felt he could not say he had everything, but that he just had a lot? Some people feel that if they do not have money now to pay for what the future may bring, that they are short of cash. A type of worry of what tomorrow may bring. Yaakov was never worried about such things, because he had trust in G-d. Just as He has taken care of me until now, so will He take care of me in the future. Yaakov lived in the Now, (another fundamental for happiness that stems from Bitachon) and was not "stuck" in worries of the future. Also, Yaakov did not look for extras; he ran a "low maintenance" budget. So, he had everything. But an Esav could always want more, more money, more gadgets in life, more power... in a never-ending list.

And it gets worse. Without feeling content, a person who is forever going after extras will never be able to be or feel grateful, making appreciation a foreign language. These are two of the cornerstones of happiness: they stem from contentment and trust in G-d. (The Vilna Gaon, in Even Shlema, writes that a person who cannot find contentment will never pray to G-d or learn Torah properly, for he will never feel genuine, inner appreciation for all that G-d does for him!) Another major facet of happiness that stems from contentment is giving to others, without expecting anything in return. You can't give if you do not have enough for yourself. Giving brings happiness, and Yaakov said that he would give a tenth of his gain.

There is another important basic requisite for happiness. Having a clear purpose in life. Even if one is content, if there is no purpose in life, there is no happiness. Life can just drag on. For Yaakov, there was great purpose in life. Faith. To serve G-d. To bring into being the שבטי י-ה. One of the clear contrasts between Yaakov and Esav was their disagreement about the World to Come. Esav believed that this world was an end in itself. So, live it up. Ya'akov's opinion was that the purpose of this world was serving G-d, with the reward reserved for the World to Come.

My rabbi once taught me a great lesson. The greatest gift you can give your children is the skill of being happy without the extra "wants". "You will give them a life of happiness". The Vilna Gaon, in Even Shlema, writes that the last of the Ten Commandments, לא תחמד, Do not covet, is the basic law of the whole Torah. And, expressed as a positive commandment would be Histapkut-contentment. Observing the mitzvah of contentment is like keeping the entire Torah. And, after writing this article, I had a new insight into the famous Mishna in Avot איזה עשיר השמח בזה Who is rich? One who is happy with his lot. This is telling us that in order to be rich, you need to be content. If you always want more, you always need to spend, and you will never have "extra" in the bank account, because you will always need it for something that you might want tomorrow.

The only way for a person to have real contentment when times are rough is with Bitachon, trust in G-d. (It is not about how you look at the cup, half full or half empty. It is about accepting things the way G-d gives them, even if the cup is really almost empty.) Trust that G-d knows exactly how much I need, when I will need it, and that He loves me much more than any human is capable of loving me.

PROBLEMATIC PERSUASION

Despite Dina's high spiritual level, Shechem succeeded in persuading her to stay. Of course, Shechem's home was definitely no place for the daughter of Yaakov. How, then, could Dina have agreed that this is where she belonged?!

Rav Yerucham Levovitz, zt"l, notes that we can see from this episode just how strong the power of persuasion can be. Even someone of Dina's high caliber was able to be persuaded to do something not at all in keeping with her stature. Indeed, it is shocking to us when we witness the greatest of men fall – through persuasion – into the clutches of sin. For some strange reason, however, we are not taken aback at our own being drawn into a sin not befitting our stature that we were somehow persuaded to commit. We find silly justification for things we did wrong and foolish things we said. If we only would stop and think, we might be amazed at how we slipped.

We have to be on guard against two different types of harmful persuasion: external and internal. We are more aware, perhaps, of the first type, in the form of people who try to get us to do or buy all sorts of things we really have no interest in. But there is also “persuasion from within,” where our feelings overpower our good sense. Persuasion usually speaks to the heart or emotion, not to the intelligence. Thus, Shechem persuaded Dina to stay by talking to her heart. Now, if power, money and wealth could seduce even a Dina, they can certainly seduce people of our much lower caliber. When the heart is influenced, even a spiritual or intellectual giant is handicapped. Even Adam, whose wisdom was on a tremendously high level before eating from the Tree of Knowledge, was not immune to persuasion.

Let me ask you: Were you ever persuaded to buy something that you did not really need? If so, perhaps you bought it because it was on sale. For many people, to pass up a sale is to feel that they are losing money. Even though they do not necessarily need the item, the fear of missing the opportunity can easily get the better of them. This is really a combination of the fear of losing money together with the materialistic drive of having more. Of course, these feelings are nonsensical, since the person did not need the item to begin with.

Through associations with successful people, the advertising industry tries to persuade us that we need a specific item in order to be successful. Indeed, marketing professionals have persuaded the world to spend oceans of money, time, and effort for the latest cell phone or cell phone app. After purchasing the phone we thought we needed, we find that we rarely, if ever, use the application for which we purchased it. The marketing professionals look for what the heart desires, and how to get people to feel that they can connect to that very coveted something – and before you know it, they have made a customer of us.

These are just a few examples of external forces of persuasion. Persuasion from within, of course, can come in a variety of different forms. For example, a man might be persuaded to believe that if he made more money, his wife would respect him more. A father might be persuaded to think that if he would take on an additional job, he would have the extra money he “needs” to be a better parent. Ironically, though, since this often comes at the expense of family time, the children may end up feeling that they barely have a father at all. But the busy father fails to see this, so convinced is he that this is the only way to be a good father. These conclusions are, of course, usually not true, but the great human desire for wealth, fame, and materialistic pleasure can easily cloud our vision.

The best solution to avoid being persuaded to act against our own best interests is to stay away from the people or things that get us to act in ways we will later regret. Each person knows from personal experience whom and what to avoid. By keeping these experiences in mind and noticing our weak spots, we will be better equipped to face the challenges of “problematic persuasion” in the future.

SELF HELP AND TORAH

A cup can that is filled half way can be looked at as either half full or half empty. The difference is perspective. From which way are you looking at the cup, from the bottom to the top or from the top to the bottom? We can look at many things in life positively or negatively. At times, however, it is important not only to change how we look at things, but to understand what it is that is causing us to have a certain perspective, and then to change that, as well.

In this weeks parasha, our rabbis tell us to take note of the specific wording that Yaakov used – יש לי כל

I have everything and the wording of Esav יש לי רב – I have a lot. This was the way each one thought. We find Yaakov saying something else that is in line with this. כי במקלי עברתי את הירדן הזה . Yaakov praised G-d , ועתה הייתי לשני מחנות , that when I crossed the Yarden, I was with my staff, alone, and now I have expanded to become two camps. This is quite strange. The reason why Yaakov now had two camps was because he split up his family and put them a day’s journey apart from one another. (Yaakov reasoned that if Esav would attack half of his family, the other part would be able to escape. Although Esav’s four hundred men were faster than Yaakov’s children, even if they were a day apart, they might catch up with the second camp in no time; but Yaakov remembered the words of his mother, Rivka, ,”Why should I lose both of you in one day?” She was prophesying that Yaakov and Esav would die on the same day. So, Yaakov split his family into two, and separated them by a day’s journey, so that even if Esav were to kill one camp, it would take him an additional day to reach the other. By then, Esav would die before he had overtaken the second group.) Even though the reason why Yaakov now had two camps and not one was due to a state of emergency, this was still enough for Yaakov to feel grateful that he had enough children to warrant splitting them into two camps.

It is amazing that Yaakov was able to be moved to a feeling of gratitude from a situation like that. And this is because of the way he looked at things, יש לי כל . How was he able to feel this way, while his brother looked at things so differently? The answer is because they had different world views. Yaakov looked at this world as temporary, and therefore, as long as he could manage to pass through this world and merit the World to Come, he was content. Esav, on the other hand, looked at this world as being all there is. That is why Esav always looked for more.

The concept that perspectives can be changed only if the belief behind the perspective is changed as well can be approached from diverse angles. For example, the self help of many psychologists and coaches and the self help of the Torah stem from two entirely different roots. These psychologists and coaches are interested in making a person successful. The Torah is interested in making a person into a better person. A mensch. The reason behind the divergence is also in the same vein. Belief in life after death is central to our religion. Our goals extend past this world to the World to Come. Being a mensch is the goal of the Jew in this world, with an eye to the importance of ethical behavior in life in the Next World. This is the goal that the Torah puts in front of us. In contrast, the way success is viewed in this world is not the success of eternity. And this is the difference between Yaakov and Esav.

We must be careful about this distinction. When many people talk about being successful, it has nothing to do with the concept of success held by our Religion. We are on a different wave-length, a different frequency. And, as we know, although we know Esav as a man of the fields and a man who was a Rasha, it does not mean that he was not a self help genius. Esav's head was buried in the Maarat Hamachpela because he thought like a mentch. But that was it: because in this world, to achieve success, sometimes you have to act like a mentch. Or at least talk like a mentch. But that was Esav's behavior only when he wanted to have his way, only when it helped him achieve one of his goals. But he was not really a mentch, and this is why his body was left out of the Maarat Hamachpela.

THE ESSENCE OF EVIL

Many people have a simplistic view of evil. They assume that evil is bad. Period! But the Torah asks us to look deeper and realize that that evil is not what it seems to be. Indeed, not even death is intrinsically bad. It is a fact, a reality. But what can be considered intrinsically evil are human decisions, perspectives, and behavior. If we consider how our Patriarchs dealt with apparent evil when confronted with it, I think you will see what I mean.

Avraham, for example, was born into a family of idolaters and a society of evil-doers. Indeed, his father's business was manufacturing idols. How did he handle this when he became aware of G-d's existence and realized that the people all around him were living a lie – and had been for ten generations? He did not sink into depression or cave in to social pressure! Avraham was able to see them as negative examples – examples of what not to be – and to convert their power of evil into the power of good. He used the technique of transforming bad into good by seeing the bad as a “wake-up” call. Indeed, the Hebrew word for evil – רע – has the same letters as the word awake or conscious – ער. Hence the Mishnah in Pirkei Avot teaches us that Avraham acquired all the merits the previous ten generations should have amassed had they acted righteously. He found purpose in their evil.

G-d is pure good, and thus His creations are never evil. Even the Satan is not “bad” in an absolute sense. We find that every creature G-d creates sings his shirah (praise) to its Maker upon finishing its mission in this world. That is why when Yaakov overpowered the Guardian Angel of Esav – also known as the Satan – the angel made the following request: Let me leave, for dawn is breaking... (Bereishit 32:27). The Talmud provides the reason given by the angel for the request: From the day I was created, never once did my time come to sing my shirah (Chulin 91b). Rav Dessler explains that the angel had never sung shirah because he had never fulfilled his mission, had never assumed his intended role, until that moment. When Yaakov bested the Satan, the latter finally assumed the role for which G-d created him: to be overpowered by the tzaddik.

With that in mind, let us zero in on the end of the exchange that Yaakov had with the satanic angel after he overpowered him. Yaakov asked: Tell me what your name is. The angel answered: Why do you ask my name?

The Mussar masters call our attention to the angel's refusal to answer Yaakov's question and reveal his name. They contrast it with the willingness of the angel who announced the conception and birth of Shimshon (Samson) to provide his name. This is how they explain the stonewalling:

In Hebrew, the name of something or someone reflects its essence. The answer given by the satanic angel was actually his name. Satan's most useful technique is presenting the glamour of nothingness, and making it look real and enticing. This is all that evil really is. Although it is nothing, the Satan markets it as everything. In contrast, real evil is created by the decisions of humanity to fall prey to the lust for pleasure, honor, power, and the like. The worldly means to attain them are not evil in and of themselves. But they give rise to evil when they are misused or misdirected. If we pose Yaakov's question to our own yetzer ha'ra (evil inclination) – What is your name, what is your essence? – we will get the same non-answer: Why do you ask? There is no answer, just a switch from defense to offense.

MARRIED TO A MATERIALISTIC MAN

We are judged for everything we do. But, that judging is so complex, because it means taking into consideration each individual person in his own, particular life, factoring in where they came from and in what given circumstances they find themselves. The same action can be a merit in one set of circumstances and a minus in another. This is why only G-d can judge, because only He knows.

Yaakov arranged his 11 children for the meeting with Esav. Where was Dina? He put her in a closed box, so that Esav would not be able to see her, and for doing so, for holding her back from meeting Esav, Yaakov was punished, for she may have been able to influence him to mend his ways. Because of this, she fell in the hands of Shechem. (Rashi)

This is hard to understand. The Talmud tells us (Pesachim 49) that “Anyone who marries off his daughter to a materialistic fellow, it is as if he is tying her up and placing her in front of a lion.” We do not say that a father should give his daughter to a materialistic fellow to be a positive influence and make him spiritual. So, how do we understand that Yaakov was held accountable for keeping his daughter from Esav?

The Hazon Ish answers that G-d knew that Dinah could have helped Esav repent. Only a Yaakov, on his high level of Ruach Hakodesh, could have been accountable for not taking this into consideration. Anyone else would not have been punished for such a thing at all. Quite the contrary. It is irresponsible to give your daughter to a man who is so materialistic.

If we shine the flashlight of our intellect on the allurements of the yetzer ha'ra and the glamorous world it spreads before us, we will see that there is really almost nothing to it. This is what the angel was communicating to Yaakov: Why do you ask my name? I do not have a name. I do not have an essence. I am here to serve you if you learn from evil what to reject and what to fight – like your Grandfather Avraham – and create good in the world.

You need to know who you are. You need to know what level you are on. It could be that what the person next to you is doing is, for him, a noteworthy deed; but in your case, that same act is looked down upon in Heaven. It could be that what is inappropriate for your neighbor is what is expected of you. The problem is that people do not have their identity straight; they do not know who they are and what the Torah expects from them on their level. Or, even worse, they do not have a Rabbi.

There is a rule in life. We don't see things as they are. We see things as we are. We project our identity on the world we see, viewing it through our own, very subjective perspective. But that is not the world we live in. The world we see is just our map of the territory, not the territory itself. When we look over our shoulder to see what the next person is up to, our perception of what is going on with him is the product of our own “take” on his situation, and it has nothing to do with objective reality.

In coaching, it is the easiest thing to tell a person what you think is the solution to his problem. But that is the worst thing that a coach can do. Because your map that you are using to give him directions is not the same map that the person is reading. At best, it is your map of his map. Coaching is about discovering the “lies”, the discrepancies between the map and the territory of your client. Once the coach achieves this, the client can figure out how to figure things out on his own. He doesn’t and didn’t need anyone to “tell him” where to go and what to do. He just needed to find the “lie” in his story.

This is why you need a Rabbi. He can tell you the truth, the absolute Torah truth. A rabbi can see through the eyes of the Torah and tell you, precisely, what the territory is.

LOSING CHESS

In Sipurim Mehachaim (and Anashim Mesaprim Al Atzmam 6) Chaim Walder tells an amazing story. By shortening it, I am doing it a great injustice. Forgive me.

Miriam was an 8 year old girl, an only child, who lived in Poland. Her father owned a factory, and she lived in a big, fancy house with a half a dozen maids. The Nazis invaded Poland and confiscated all of her parents’ possessions. All Jews needed to wear the yellow star, with the inscription “Jude.” One day, in middle of supper, they were surprised by S.S. officers, who came to take Miriam’s father. Before leaving forever, he whispered in Miriam’s mother’s ear ... “If the Germans want to send you and Miriam away to labor camps, don’t be seduced by their offers. Go to the house of our trusted maidservant, Anna, and ask her to hide you two in her home, for good pay.” With that, he left, never to be seen again. When the Nazi officers made the announcements ordering all the Jews to gather at the main square, to be sent to the labor camps, Miriam and her mother ran to Anna’s house. With them, taking an attaché case of clothes, and all the cash that was saved up in hiding.

Anna’s 1.5 room apartment was in a simple neighborhood, in a five story building, on the top floor. Anna was shocked when she opened her door to the knocking of Miriam and her mother. Miriam’s mother begged and pleaded to be allowed in, saying that she would pay a hefty rent for each month Anna would hide them. Anna let them board in a bedroom that was more like a closet, with one bed for both. They stayed for a few weeks at Anna’s. The Germans announced that any gentile who was found hiding a Jew would be shot, but Miriam’s mother promised Anna that the moment the Nazis would come to search the building, both she and Miriam would jump out the window, onto the porch off the second floor, so the Germans won’t find them at Anna’s. Anna calmed down a bit.

During the time that they stayed with Anna, Miriam was not allowed to make any noise. She was allowed to play chess with Julia, Anna’s 8 year old daughter. Miriam, a smart girl, an ace at chess, had no problem winning each game that she played with Julia. They played a lot, Miriam winning each game. Miriam’s mother told her, “It’s not good that you are winning each time. I want you to let her win; give her the feeling of victory. Anna and Julia are being so kind to us by letting us hide here. We need to be good to them, too. Jealousy is a very dangerous thing.”

It was hard, but Miriam allowed Julia to win. Julia was so excited! She ran to Anna to tell about her first victory. The next day, Miriam let her win some more. After a few more days, Miriam let Julia win all the games except one, so that Julia would not suspect that she was being allowed to win.

Early one morning, the Nazis arrived at Anna’s street, preparing to make a thorough search. White as a ghost, Anna woke up Miriam and her mother, and sternly directed them to the window. They packed their bag with whatever they might be able to use, if either one of them would survive the jump and then survive dealing with the Nazis downstairs. Too frightened to cry, they headed for the window.

Suddenly, Julia stood in their way. Julia was a big, rough girl. She told her mother Anna, “I don’t care what, I am not letting Miriam go. She is my only friend.” Anna tried pushing Julia out of the way, but Julia went to the window to scream loudly, bringing lots of attention to that fifth floor apartment. Anna pleaded with her daughter, “So, Julia, what is your alternative option? We will all be killed?” Julia replied, “Miriam and I built a clubhouse on the roof of the building. Let them climb up the trap window and pull up the ladders after themselves. They can hide in the clubhouse.” Anna directed them to follow Julia’s plan. While hiding up on the roof, they heard the Nazis search room after room. After the stamping of boots stopped, Miriam heard, through the roof, Julia singing her song. “I won Miriam, I beat Hitler! I won Miriam, I beat Hitler!”

One lesson we can learn from this story is that losing is sometimes winning. But in this week’s parasha, we are taught how Jews are to behave with Esav in Exile. When Yaakov headed for Eretz Yisrael, he sent messengers, angels, to Esav to see how he was doing, to see if he was still angry with him for taking the blessings. The response from the angels was that Esav was coming to fight Yaakov, with 400 generals of war. The Midrash tells us, that if Yaakov would have tiptoed back home, not sending a message to Esav, Esav would have never come out to fight. Now that he “pulled the lion by his ear”, he woke up the lion.

Upon hearing the news that his brother was coming to fight, Yaakov was overcome with fear. He was not afraid of Esav’s strength, but of the two mitzvot that Esav had to his credit and that he, Yaakov, did not. For the last 22 years, Esav had been honoring Yitzhak, and had been living in Eretz Yisrael. The Midrashim also tell us that Yaakov’s angels were mighty, and that Esav’s men were being badly beaten on their way. If Yaakov had such might on his side of the battle, beating Esav seems to be a cinch. Why, exactly, was he afraid that he was going to get hurt?

The answer is that Yaakov knew the score. This world is given to Esav, for his having honored Yitzhak. Yaakov’s mitzvot can’t be cashed in in this world, for that would be like buying half a gumball with a million dollar check. In this world, Esav has power, as long as our spiritual level is not high enough to be our saving grace. Esav was given his whole reward in this world, for all the generations, for that one mitzvah! Yaakov’s only way to survive is to tiptoe safely through the Exile. Not to show off our money, not to show off our achievements. But to stay low key... Losing is sometimes winning.

At his death bed, Yaakov bowed to his son, King Yosef. (Breishit 47; 31. Rashi.) About this there is a famous Talmudic quote. “There is one month a year that the fox is king of the animals. In that month, bow to the fox.” (Megillah 16b) Certain people are put on positions in our lives that we just have to accept the fact that they are in that position, and make the best of the situation. Even if it is not fair. One can get much further in life by accepting this. Miriam’s mother knew this secret of success in life, and passed it on to Miriam. Miriam hopes that we all learn it as well.
